Please read and understand this document before signing. If you have any questions, please ask us or consult an attorney. You are giving up specific legal rights by signing this contract.

Cable Natural History Museum, Inc., its employees, agents, directors, officers, sponsors, advertisers, volunteers, contractors and subrogors (hereinafter the Museum) have done everything possible to ensure that you have a rewarding experience. We wish to inform you that exploring and learning about the outdoors (hereinafter “Exploring the Outdoors”) are not risk free. The same elements that contribute to the unique character and fun of Exploring the Outdoors, such as the physical exertion or the settings, can cause loss or damage to equipment, injury, illness, or in extreme cases, permanent trauma, or death. We do not want to heighten or reduce your enthusiasm for the experience, but we do want you to know in advance what to expect, and to be informed of the possible risks. We ask that you read this, sign it, and return it to our office or your program leader.

EXPRESS ASSUMPTION OF THE RISK

There are risks that accompany all aspects of life, including Exploring the Outdoors. Some of these risks are inherent in the activity; some are changed, increased or decreased due to the activities of the Museum. You and your minor children must understand and accept all the risks of the activity, inherent and others. By understanding these risks, the trip will be more enjoyable.

Children enjoy life. In that process, children fall down, get back up and keep having fun. Sometimes, though, a child might not get back up as quickly or bounce back as fast. As a parent you know there is no way to prevent a child from falling down or getting hurt. The Museum and its staff will do the best job we can to help your child bounce back and enjoy the activity. However, you need to acknowledge and understand that no matter how much work we do; sometimes a child can get hurt.

Exploring the Outdoors is the opportunity for a child or adult to experience new games, sports, activities, friends, and nature. There is no way that the Museum can list all the risks of these activities or the outdoors. It is your responsibility to familiarize yourself with the risks to ascertain that you and your child are willing and able to accept those risks. The following is a review of the partial risks that your child may encounter. Please review these and talk to Museum staff or others if you have questions.

You understand we are going to enter the habitat of wild animals and plants while Exploring the Outdoors. We are visitors to their homes. You and your child agree to respect the environment and allow wildlife a substantial buffer unless otherwise instructed by the Museum. You understand that you must obey the directions of staff and leave the area in as pristine condition as possible. Annoying, chasing or harassing wildlife is illegal and may permanently injure them. Do not feed the wildlife. Federal laws protect threatened and endangered species. Harming a threatened or endangered species in any way may subject you to fines and criminal imprisonment. Do not catch or attempt to catch any animal unless encouraged to do so by the Museum, and you feel comfortable with the contact. Animals bite, scratch, peck and claw, which may cause serious injury and infection. Ticks and mosquitoes now carry potentially dangerous and debilitating diseases. Use appropriate measures, such as repellents and protective clothing, to avoid being bitten by them. Talk to the staff about dealing with specific animals that may cause major threats to your safety.

Any time you are hiking, skiing or snowshoeing there are risks to be encountered which you need to understand. This is especially true if you are not experienced in Exploring the Outdoors. When Exploring the Outdoors, remember to prepare in advance. You may need water, rain or winter gear, sun protection, insect protection, and good shoes or snowboots. When hiking, skiing or snowshoeing, you may go up and down hills, cross uneven terrain, step on unstable rocks, and cross streams. Footing may be unstable and difficult; you might slip and fall. The trails may be next to cliffs or dangerous.

Exploring the Outdoors includes a risk for Hypothermia. Hypothermia is the name for a medical condition where the core body temperature drops to a point that the body is unable to maintain and heat itself. Being wet and in the wind contributes to Hypothermia. Hypothermia can quickly result in death.

Sunburn, dehydration, heat exhaustion, heat stroke, heat cramps, wind, rain, and being in the open for the extended length of the program may be uncomfortable or cause injury or illness. Travel to and from the Exploring the Outdoors is incidental to the Exploring the Outdoors. Accidents may occur during travel to and from the Exploring the Outdoors activity site. Some participants may suffer mental anguish or trauma from the experience or their injuries.

This list is not an exclusive or exhaustive list of possible injuries; trauma, illness, or accidents that may occur while Exploring the Outdoors. Most of these injuries are rare, and you are not likely to encounter them. However, they have occurred, and you need to know about them and other possible injuries not mentioned above. These injuries occur more often when the participants are using drugs or alcohol or not physically able to undertake the activity.
